The Moseley and the Romer-An Old Letter. dence of the Richmond Dispatch.

Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.]

NORFOLK, February 7, 1885.

The steamer Jane Moseley, which was damaged some time ago in collision with the Chesapeake and Ohio barge, has been repaired and went out this morning on her first trip.

The Romer is still on the ways at Graves's ship-yard, and looks like she had encountered a gale of wind off Hatteras. The trouble between the owners and the Underwriters' Agency has not been settled, and no work has been done on the steamer.

FEBRUARY 7, 1885.

I wrote the Dispatch on the 3d of January that the Council of Danville had been claiming that the Danville and New-River Railroad Company was owing the city about 47,200 as her share of the profits of the road during the last two years, and that the parties had agreed to refer the matter to Judge E. C. Burks, of Bedford county, the company to pay all the expenses of the arbitration. Judge Burks has been here and had the matter in hand, and yesterday the same known that he had decided in hear of the company. The precise is or of the company. The precise

MASKED ROBBERS

An Ohio Farmer Resists Torture and Saves His Hidden Money.

A Dayton special says: Two robbers broke down the door of a country residence last night and took the inmates-Philip Glass and sister-from their beds, bound and gagged them, and began ransacking the house, finding only fifty dollars. They asked Glass for more, and he said he had none. They knew better, and demanded $1,000 that he had received the morning before in Dayton for wheat.
